

6 U.S. Aides Get Annual Awards For Paperwork

Six government executives were given awards last night at the annual paperwork management awards banquet.

With nominees of 15 other branches and agencies, they were honored for "outstanding leadership and professional excellence in promoting effective paperwork management in the government of the United States of America" at the banquet at the Shoreham Hotel sponsored by the Administrative Management Society.

Comptroller General Elmer B. Staats told the local body of the 15,000-member organization that the occasion "represents a significant and concrete demonstration of the interest of the business community in working with the government in its important and continuing 'war on waste'—a war in which all taxpayers, in and out of government, have an obvious interest in winning."

He said the federal government produced 4.8 million cubic feet—10.5 billion pages—of records in the last fiscal year.

Recipients of the awards were: Joseph F. Gorman, assistant chief of the records management branch of the Atomic Energy Commission; Rear Adm. Ira F. Haddock, assistant chief for supply management of the Department of the Navy; Ollon D. McCool, chief of the office management division of the Army Adjutant General's office.

Frank X. Thornton, deputy chief of the publishing division of the Department of the Air Force; Charles E. Wylie, chief of the paperwork management division of the Department of Agriculture, and William F. Zimmermann Sr., records management officer of the D.C. Government.
